SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

The Sweet o' the Year.

Joy sways the wind, the summer wind, Joy lights the fires of dawn, And wings the happy feet that glide Along the velvet lawn.

(For Love has come to bide with us And never pass away; What matters storm or shine to us If only Love may stay.)

A clearer gold the lily wears, The rose a richer hue, The skies their benediction breathe From depths of burning blue

The hillside pastures, softly green, dreaming in the sun; brooks with tinkling laughter light

And past the banks where willows gnarled Their ancient vigil keep, The drowsy river slowly drifts And murmurs in its sleep.

Ah, sweet the wind, and glad the light, And amber-deep the shade; On hill and stream and city streat The spell of Joy is laid.

(For Love has come to bide with us
And never pass away;
What matters storm or shine to us
If only Love may stay.)

Orleans Times-Democrat.

Written From Rome.

The following letter, written from Rome to the society editor of The Times-Dispatch, by a well known young vocalist of Richmond, will be read with interest. The young lady in question, has been traveling during the summer with a party that included Miss Maude Starke, of Richmond; Mrs. and Miss Little, of New York, and Miss Puffer, of Massachusetts. This is the letter:

Rome, Italy, August 20th.

My Dear Friend,—I have been wishing all, through the summer to tell you something of our pleasant trip, but I find it difficult to write, when moving rapidly from place to place. We have been in Rome now for nearly ten days, a stay greatly enjoyed and appreciated by each one of us.

When we landed at Liverpool, in Eng-Written From Rome.

greatly enjoyed and appreciated by each one of us.

When we landed at Liverpool, in England, we went directly to Chester and took in Warwick, Stratford and Oxford, on our way to London, From that metropolis our route lay through Paris, Brussels, Antwerp, Colegne, up the Rhine to Brienz; afterward to Heidelberg, Strasburg, Berne and Interlaken. We made the ascent of Mount Pilatus and were rewarded by the beauty of a splendid sun view.

Our next point was Lucerne and thence with pauses at Milan, Venice and Florence, to Rome.

Our next point was become and Florcree, to Rome.

We have had beautiful weather here,
and have met lots of Americans, friends and strangers among them.

To-morrow we leave for Naples. Just one more stop at Palermo, where we sail on August 27th for New York and home. I cannot realize that our muchtalked-of jour is about over. As a party, we are sorry, yet delighted, at the prospect of so soon seeing God's own country, America.

Last Sunday we had an audience with the Pope, and I think we, all of us, were impressed with his kind, strong face and surprised to find him an older man than we had functed. He must be sixty or more, Asking your forgiveness for taking up so much of your time, and hoping your summer has proved delightful, I am,
with kindest regards, your summer has possessive with kindest regards,
Very sincerely,

OLD AGE.

BY BERNARD BARTON

Other selections from this author, his portrait, autograph and biographical sketch, have already been printed in this series.

LD age! thou art a bitter pill For humankind to swallow; Fraught with many a present ill, And fear of worse to follow.

And yet thou art a medicine good.

Not to be bought for money;

Worse than the worst of nauseous food, Yet sweeter far than honey.

Thy aches and cramps, thy weary groans, Infirmities which breed them. Might move the heart of stones If stones had heart to heed them

But these must come, of course, with thee, And none dispute, or doubt them; Such may be borne, and wisest be Who pothers least about them.

Old age! be what thou wilt, thy reign Cannot endure for ever; Feebleness, weariness and pain Are links that soon must sever!

And if thy pains the soul recall

To heavenly truth and warning,
Who would regret the ruined wall. That lets in such a morning?

This series began in The Times-Dispatch Sunday, October 11, 1903. One is published each day
